‘Extraordinary Attorney Woo’ a must watch on Netflix

The South Korean legal drama “Extraordinary Attorney Woo” has regained the top position on Netflix’s latest weekly viewership chart of non-English TV shows, the global video streaming service .

Heroine, Eun-bin Park does a good job in reflection on Autism.A smart autistic young woman Woo Young-woo (Park Eun-bin) arrives at work at a law firm and is met with skepticism that she can carry out her role in defending clients and arguing cases in court. She quickly makes friends with another young lawyer (Kange Tae-oh) who treats her with kindness despite some of her mannerisms, and instills confidence in her to take on a court case that involves an elderly couple from her childhood.

It’s a bit like the American show House where an “eccentric” professional solves a case of the week, but tonally the shows are quite different based on who is at the center of the frame.

Her world is also filled with nice characters. Hardly anyone is overtly mean to her , save for one colleague who asks her point blank if she’s dumb when she can’t figure out how to exit a revolving door, though her colleagues definitely have some healthy skepticism that is designed to show how much she’s capable of doing when faced with adversity.

Overall the watchers are not forced to squirm as they watch drama unfold!

It rose one notch from second place a week earlier, while last week’s No. 1, “Alba,” dropped to second with 33.5 million hours. The 16-part Korean-language show has stayed in the top 10 for a total of four weeks, including three No. 1 finishes.

“I’m sorry for saying you’re not an ordinary attorney,” her new colleague says after he mentions how difficult it is for other attorneys to meet clients outside of the office. “It’s okay,” she says. “I’m not an ordinary attorney.” I half expected her to follow that up with “I’m an extraordinary one,” but that would’ve been too on the nose.

Extraordinary Attorney Woo is quickly shaping up to be the best drama of the year, so do not miss it.
