Qlik launches first India cloud region in Mumbai

URVI MALVANIA
Mumbai, November 21

DATA INTEGRATION, ANALYTICS and artificial intelligence (AI) services provider Qlik has announced the launch of its new cloud region in India. Located in Mumbai, the cloud is an effort towards serving the growing demand for local data storage, regulatory compliance, and advanced AI capabilities, the Pennsylvania-headquartered company said.

"Our cloud is based out of the AWS cloud. We wanted to work in a way that our capabilities align with the capabilities they offer. A complete set of the desired capabilities with AWS was available in Mumbai, which allowed us to bring all our AI capabilities to our Indian customers," Varun Babbar, managing director - India & SAARC, Qlik, said stating why Mumbai was selected as the cloud region.

AWS has two cloud regions in the country — one in Mumbai, and another in Hyderabad. The new cloud will cater to the rising demand for sovereign cloud services in the country as more enterprises look for data localisation and more public sector enterprises digitalise, in addition to existing and proposed regulations around data residency.

A sovereign cloud is a cloud computing environment that stores data within a country's borders and is governed by its laws.

"We want to make sure that there's no impediment for us in doing business here. So, it's not like we said the sovereign cloud is going to get us this much more business. It will ease friction in terms of our growth ambition," Mike Capone, CEO, Qlik said.

US agencies seek Google breakup

GOOGLE SHOULD ALSO be required by the court to allow rival search engines to display the company's results and access its data for a decade, the government said.

The proposals are the most significant remedies requested in a tech antitrust case since the Justice Department asked to break up Microsoft in 2000. If Judge Mehta adopts the proposals, they will set the tone for a string of other antitrust cases that challenge the dominance of tech behemoths, including Apple, Amazon and Meta.

Being forced to sell Chrome and Android would be among the worst possible outcomes for Google. Chrome, which was introduced in 2008 and is free to use, is the most popular web browser in the world, with an estimated 67% of the global browser market, according to Statcounter, which compiles tech market data. Google's search engine is bundled into Chrome.

Android is the world's most popular mobile software, with an estimated 71% of the market, according to Statcounter. The system is open-source, meaning that Samsung and other phone manufacturers do not have to pay Google for its use. But most Android devices come with Google's apps already installed.

Both are part of an elaborate Google ecosystem that keeps people using the company's products.

"The playing field is not level because of Google's conduct, and Google's quality reflects the ill-gotten gains of an advantage illegally acquired," the government said in the filing. "The remedy must close this gap and deprive Google of these advantages."

Google is set to file its own suggestions for fixing the search monopoly by December 20

Legal experts said that the request to force the sale of Chrome could be met with skepticism by Judge Mehta, in part because the government's attempted breakup of Microsoft in the 2000s was overturned by an appeals court.

"That's going to be an uphill climb for the government," said Doug Melamed, a visiting fellow at Stanford Law School who worked in the Justice Department's antitrust division during the Microsoft case.

Google is set to file its own suggestions for fixing the search monopoly by December 20. Both sides can modify their requests before Judge Mehta is expected to hear arguments on the remedies this spring. He is expected to rule by the end of the summer. Kent Walker, Google's president of global affairs, called the government's proposal "extreme." "DOJ's wildly overbroad proposal goes miles beyond the court's decision," he said in a blog post. "It would break a range of Google products—even beyond Search—that people love and find helpful in their everyday lives."

Prioritising integrated computing: Nvidia exec

PADMINI DHURVARAJ
Bengaluru, November 21

During the panel discussion at the Bengaluru Tech Summit, Qualcomm said its focus is on edge AI

NVIDIA IS SHIFTING its focus from just chips to a more integrated approach, identifying a data centre as the new unit of computing, Hasan Ajiaz, business head (cloud and consumer internet), Nvidia South Asia, said on Thursday.

"You don't have to think chips. You don't have to think systems. You have to think how chips and systems work together along with the network, along with the software. And the applications which come at the top of this entire stack, how do you accelerate them?" Ajiaz said at the Bengaluru Tech Summit. "Accelerated computing, we realise, is the future," he added.

Meanwhile, Qualcomm said it is focused on edge AI, particularly in making on-device AI more accessible and efficient for consumers. Srinji Maddali, SVP, engineering at Qualcomm, said, "AI on the edge is not an option; it is a necessity."

He highlighted that Qualcomm has already integrated on-device AI into several products such as laptops, smartphones, IoT devices, and smart assistants. "The recent one we launched, the Snapdragon 8B, can not only dynamically manage AI work flows but also multimodal gen-AI real-time," he said.

At the panel discussion, Ajiaz and Maddali also shared their perspectives on how their companies are shaping India's AI landscape. "If we train the engineers, if we help them with the right products and tools, India and Indian engineers are going to take the world by a storm," Ajiaz said.
