NGT: Can river get polluted by milk ritual?

Bhopal: The National Green Tribunal (NGT) has sought responses from the Central and state pollution control boards over a plea alleging that 11,000 litres of milk and 210 saarees were offered at the Narmada River during a religious event in Madhya Pradesh's Sehore district, polluting the water body. Hearing a petition against the Madhya Pradesh govt, the tribunal directed authorities to examine whether such religious rituals violate existing environmental guidelines or require fresh anti-pollution regulations.

Nearly 11,000 litres of milk were poured into the river as part of a ritual on the culmination of a 21-day religious event in Satdev village in the Bherunda area on April 8, prompting environmentalists to flag its negative impact on the ecosystem.

The NGT's Central Zone bench in Bhopal was hearing a petition against the state govt Monday. The bench comprising Justice Sheo Kumar Singh and expert member Sudhir Kumar Chaturvedi directed the Central Pollution Control Board (CPCB) and MPPCB to submit reports on whether such rituals are covered under existing environmental guidelines or fresh regulations are required.

The applicants alleged that approximately 11,000 litres of milk and 210 sarves were offered to the Narmada River during the rituals. They contended that the ritual could adversely affect the river's ecology, aquatic organisms, irrigation sources and drinking water quality and violate provisions of the Water (Prevention and Control of Pollution) Act, 1974.

While the tribunal observed that no scientific data had been placed before it regarding pollution caused by pouring milk into rivers, it noted that section 24 of the Water Act prohibits the discharge of polluting matter into streams and wells.

It pointed out that organic substances may increase Biological Oxygen Demand (BOD), potentially affecting aquatic life. The tribunal further observed that pouring milk into the Narmada during rituals had become a matter of environmental and public concern requiring examination by pollution control authorities.

Over 600 lawyers appeared on behalf of dog lovers in SC

New Delhi: Practically every well known senior advocate in the country was there in the list of over 600 lawyers who appeared in the apex court in the stray dog menace case.

Interestingly, most of them appeared for dog lovers while the opposite side — representing Resident Welfare Associations and others — were in numbers. The case was argued before solicitor general At Tushar Mehta, reports Amit Anand Choudhary. A three-judge bench had given a patient and marathon hearing over seven days in which more than 600 lawyers and in individuals were involved, including 68 senior advocates. All the parties were represented by a team of counsels, including Abhishek Manu Singhvi, Kapil Sibal, K K Venugopal Siddharth Luthra, Prashant Bhushan, Arvind Datta, Shyam Divlan, Colina Gonsalves, Anand Grover. C U Singh to name a few — had appeared on the side of the dog lovers. The court has asked the government to file a written affidavit on the subject. The court has also asked the government to file a written affidavit on the subject. The court has also asked the government to file a written affidavit on the subject.

The lawyers appearing for dog lovers had pleaded the court to take a more sympathetic approach towards strays, particularly community dogs and submitted that they should be released in the same area after sterilisation and vaccination. But their plea was strongly opposed by the solicitor general Tushar Mehta, who highlighted the problem of the menace posed in gated societies where few people, claiming to be dog lovers, bulldoze the opinion of the rest. He told the court that animal love is not confined to one animal and someday somebody may bring buffaloes within the society.

Devotees throng Bhojshala to offer Tuesday prayers

Dhar: The first rays of Tuesday morning sun had barely touched Dhar when the sound of conches began rending the air. Devotees were already streaming in, many draped in saffron and yellow, filling corridors that have stood in quiet.

The Bhojshala complex, with its intricately carved pillars still bearing the scars of time, was alive again with prayers.

It was the first Tuesday after the Indore bench of the Madhya Pradesh high court declared on May 15 that Bhojshala is a temple and centre of learning, clearing the way for Hindus to have unrestricted access to the site by quashing a 2003 Archaeological Survey of India (ASI) order, which allowed Hindus to offer prayers at the site only on Tuesdays and Muslims on Fridays, reports Pooja Barnola.

The court also observed the continuity of Hindu worship at the monument, a site built during the Parmar dynasty around 1034 CE, and one that Muslims have long claimed as Kamal Masjid mosque.

The atmosphere inside was a blend of devotion and vindication. Elaborate security arrangements had been made, with tent walls lining the path to Bhojshala, forming a passageway that blocked the view to the mosque and the shrines dotting the complex.

Behind those walls, inside the ancient corridors, rows of children were reading out Sanskrit verses in the presence of their gurus and priests seated before a cardboard 3D image of the Vagdevi statue. The original idol, taken to the British Museum in London, has been absent from its site for generations. In its place stood this symbolic image, worshipped with the same reverence.
